WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

A weakening front will approach the coast and produce isolated showers across far northwest California today. Otherwise, dry weather with a warming trend is in store through midweek as high pressure builds over the area.

Medford Weather:

Wider coverage and a higher probability of rain is forecast today, mainly west of the Cascades during the afternoon and early evening. Increased clouds across the area and the mainly west side rainfall will result in highs a few degrees cooler than on Sunday. A high pressure ridge will begin to build into the West Coast tonight. This will stabilize the air mass and result in areas of low clouds and patches of coastal and west side valley fog early Tuesday morning. The ridge will be weakened on Wednesday as a very weak cold front brushes past into Canada and Washington. This is expected to bring an increase in high clouds except for some lower clouds and maybe a few sprinkles near North Bend.

Reno Weather:

A few light showers will linger across portions of the basin and range today. Clearing skies and drier conditions will become established this week as high pressure develops across the region. Seasonable temperatures will prevail through midweek with cold overnight lows expected across valley locations. Temperatures warm again by the second half of the week and into next weekend.

San Francisco Weather:

Isolated showers will end by this afternoon. Warmer temperatures are forecast by Tuesday and Wednesday as offshore flow develops as a result of a building upper level ridge and surface level thermal trough.

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Other than a few lingering showers in the northern Sierra today, warmer and drier weather along with breezy north winds develop across the region early this week.

Hanford Weather:

A few showers are possible over the higher elevations of the Sierra Nevada this afternoon as a trough of low pressure exits the region. Higher pressure moving in by Tuesday will produce clearer skies and warming temperatures for the area through the week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Low pressure aloft will move slowly east through today. Coastal morning clouds and drizzle in coastal and valley sections are also possible. Temperatures will be gradually warming through the middle of next week as the low slowly continues to the east.

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

A low pressure system moving into Nevada today and a second low pressure system developing near Yuma Tuesday will maintain a slight chance of mainly afternoon and early evening showers, mainly near the mountains, into Tuesday. There will be gusty northeast winds near the coastal foothills for Tuesday into Thursday. A deep marine layer this morning will become patchier for Tuesday and Wednesday, and then may return late in the week. Weak high pressure aloft will return for next weekend bringing a warming trend.

Southeast California Weather:

A persistent area of low pressure over the western United States will bring elevated chances of showers and thunderstorms to the Desert Southwest through the middle of the week. Temperatures will cool off as the low pressure affects the region resulting in highs in the 80s, or a few degrees below normal. Drier air will filter later this week ending rain chances after Thursday.
